

ABSTRACT

A system where pieces of information equipment are connected via a network, including a memory unit and a compensating means. The memory unit stores position information that represents a physical position of each piece of information equipment. The compensating means compensates a physical distance from one piece of information equipment to another piece of information equipment based on the position information, according to a frequency of information exchange between the former and the latter.

0976870:043504